COCKTAIL COLLECTION

Tom Duggan, born 1822, was a school teacher who became active in the Irish Republican Brotherhood (Fenians) and used the Ballincollig branch of the Catholic Young Men's Society as a cover to recruit young men to the cause of Irish nationalism.

After being dismissed from teaching, it appears that Tom left Ireland for the United States and it is believed that he took part in the Civil War on the Confederate side. After returning home, he resumed his activities with the I.R.B. By this time, as far as the authorities were concerned, he was a marked man and he was arrested in Moxley's Bar (now The Angler's). Duggan was tried, convicted and sentenced to transportation to Australia for 10 years.

His story reflects the stories of hundreds of Fenians whose lives were changed forever by their decision to couple their fates to the cause of Irish nationalism.
